

This year's Open Day has not only attracted the participation of all UoN teaching and non-teaching units but also stakeholders drawn from industry.

Presiding over the opening ceremony, the Vice-Chancellor, Prof. Peter Mbithi said that open days give faculty staff the opportunity to interact with prospective students and the public at large, sharing the University's academic programmes, research outputs and services.

"Through the open day, the University is making a statement about the quality of services we render to the public and this is evident in our readiness to display ourselves for public scrutiny of our products and services," he said.

The Open Day brings together University of Nairobi staff and students in addition to key players in the education sector. The event is in partnership with the Nation Media Group. Other partners include Gionee, a smart phone company, University of Nairobi Enterprises and Services (UNES). AIESEC UoN is also exhibiting.

Prospective students, parents and guardians have the advantage of interacting with faculty, and receiving information on holistic education provided by the University of Nairobi. Those interested in joining the University have an opportunity to apply for the course of their choice on the spot through the online application for self sponsored students.
